Into a pale pink, for instance.

The demand for seven-cent pieces is particularly strong in Burlington at the present time.

Gov. Coolidge of Massachusetts surely got his money's worth—he spent $2,171.90 in his election campaign.

It is up to the voters of the fifth Wisconsin district to see to it that Victor Berger is not triumphantly re-elected to Congress in the forthcoming election to fill the vacancy caused by the House's action in unseating Berger.

Nearly everyone can, and will, say amen to the following portion of Gov. Clement's Thanksgiving day proclamation: "Let us pray that wise counsels may prevail to defend us from the perils which confront us." There is a great deal bound up in those words.

The prince of Wales showed his adaptability to American ways by purchasing a quantity of Red Cross Christmas seals. It is for us who boast of our real Americanism that we do as well as the heir to the British throne in this campaign against tuberculosis, for the money derived from the sale of Christmas seals is intended for the anti-tuberculosis fight.

It will be a bad day when the United States consents to give up the top of Maine to the Dominion of Canada. These days, nations are fighting to get more territory to accommodate their fast increasing populations. It would not be a wise policy for the United States to get rid of any of its territory included in the present area of the United States proper, however poor that territory might seem to be at the present time.

There is a considerable amount of unpaid pledges to the Brattleboro war chest; and the sponsors for the movement, and others, are considering the plan of publishing the names of the delinquents. The publishing of such a list would, without doubt, be unfair to some (probably a minority) who have good reasons why they have not paid their pledges, and it is to be doubted whether the threat to publish such a list would be effective in bringing very much of the unpaid amount into the treasury. A system of private collection on threat of suit might do a great deal of good. Barre's war chest also has its delinquents, as has the great war chest of Springfield, Mass. Some means ought to be devised to force payment from those who promised and who are well able to meet their obligations. It is by no means fair to those who have paid in full that the delinquents should be allowed to sneak out of their duty.

The decision of a large dye manufacturing concern to locate a branch of its business in Barre is based on the belief that Barre can furnish the women needed for the business. It is understood that the branch business will be started on a comparatively small scale, not more than 25 women being employed at the outset, but it seems probable that if the help is available there will be an expansion of the business in due time. The Peerless plant was secured partially because of the assumption that there would be a large number of women available. Such an assumption is thought to be well founded because up to the present time there are few industries in Barre which employ women. There should be several hundred women available for these occupations in Barre alone, while in the outside territory many more could be secured. In fact, Barre seems to offer many advantages from the standpoint of the availability of women workers.

SHORTAGE OF NEWS PRINT PAPER.

At the meeting of the American Publishers' association in New York this week, the shortage of news print paper was the matter uppermost in the minds of the publishers of newspapers throughout the country. That there is a real shortage of news print paper at the present is known to every newspaper man who has tried to round up enough paper to publish a paper every day of the normal number of issues; and, furthermore, there is no prospect of relief from the serious situation. Those newspapers which have contracts with the news print manufacturers are perhaps more fortunate than those who have to bid in the open market for the product and take their chances of getting enough paper to print on; but those having contracts are restricted to the lowest tonnage possible to produce the newspapers and at a price considerably in advance of previous charges. A large number of small papers which are not strong enough financially to meet the added cost, and some of the larger papers which are having trouble in weathering the financial storm, may be forced out of business completely.

Comradeship

Any worth-while social organization must be founded upon the broad principle of comradeship.

Those two great national associations which we honor and love, the G. A. R. and the American Legion, are outstanding examples of this principle in practice; examples of comradeship inspired through sympathy, warmed by suffering and cemented together by a common sacrifice.

The modern banking institution, realizing as it must its obligation to the community where it exists, should emulate and help translate this spirit of comradeship; in other words, it should lock arms with the people for the progress and upbuilding of the community.

It should march as the boys of '61 and '18, shoulder to shoulder, and step by step with the advancing interests of its patrons.

We feel that this is our duty to the people of Barre and vicinity and we want to go forward together.

The Peoples National Bank of Barre

4 Per Cent—The Only National Bank in Barre—4 Per Cent

during the coming year. That is the real situation.

The remedy for such a situation as presented to the American Publishers' association was to cut down the space devoted to advertising and increase the rates of advertising and subscription. That plan may be all right for those papers which are overburdened with advertising and have plenty of reserve financial resources on which to rely during the transition period incident to the increase of advertising and subscription rates, and possibly thereafter. But for the small newspapers, that remedy does not offer an entirely satisfactory remedy.

The better remedy for the shortage of news print paper will be to require that the newspapers publishing "boiler plate" matter as fillers, so-called features and miscellaneous matter, wholly unrelated to news and current events, discontinue the use of such matter and cut down the number of pages which are wasted. That elimination would include the Sunday supplements of many newspapers, those supplements being of such a nature that in nine cases out of ten the readers do not even glance at the pages. Tons upon tons of valuable news print are wasted every week in this reckless manner. So it seems that the first effort toward relieving the shortage would naturally be to eliminate the waste in many of the larger newspapers.

No More Spooning in Hyde Park.

The correspondent from that town says: "Can it be that they have put a knife in covered bridges? Why, way back—not as far as Adam's time but four generations ago—it has been the one place for the young folks to meet and whisper fond nothings, and once in a while an old boy would kick over the traces and meet someone he used to know or wanted to, and all is past. Wright provides, as the good book says, and only a memory of what has been is left. Sad, sad."

As It Should Be in That Blissful Region

"There was a good attendance at church Sunday night."—Eden item.

They then entered into the living room, which was beautifully decorated with the stars and stripes. Then into the parlor, which was decorated with pink and white, where they were united in marriage. After the ceremony they marched back into the dining room."—Description of a Waterbury wedding.
